Who lived a more colorful and interesting existence than this President? He was a rancher in the west. He participated as a member of the Rough Riders. He was a historian. He went on an African safari. He was quite involved in the development of the Panama Canal. He was the youngest person ever to become President of the United States; however, he was not the youngest person that was ever elected to the office of President. And these are just a few of his accomplishments.

Theodore Roosevelt was an active and involved man. He lived life to the fullest and tried to make the world a better place for others. Today, we still benefit from some of his many deeds. Some of the national forests in the West came about as a result of legislation enacted during the time he was President. He worked with college leaders to organize the National Collegiate Athletic Association.
